Around 50 delegates were entertained by lively London Barrister, Alastair Hodge, during two seminars which brought them up to date with the latest employment legislation. Phillips Solicitors, in association with Reed Specialist, held an early 8.00am session and a second 10.00am session at the Hampshire Court Hotel, for managers involved in human resource matters. Dull and dry it was not, but on a serious note delegates were taken through practical employee management; responsibilities when taking on temporary staff; best practice when handling redundancy issues; and important updates in employment law. One delegate commented: "Many thanks for a very well presented and informative session." Gill Brown, partner heading up the employment law team said: "Employment law is complex at the best of times but in these difficult economic conditions businesses need more than ever to be properly informed and kept up to date with best practice."
